Dear Erv:

I am replying to your letter of August 26th, since Ed Handy is at present on a field trip in the far West.

A Class A operator cannot come into a station licensed to a Class B operator and work 20- or 75-meter 'phone. It's dislegal. Sec. 12.116 of the amateur regulations takes care of the matter by saying the station must be licensed to a "person who holds an amateur operator license endorsed for Class A operating privileges, and actual operation and control of the station is maintained by an operator holding Class A privileges."

Concerning multi-use of one call for different installations, the examples you cited are quite in order. There can be a W9HRM working any number of portable or portable-mobile W9HRMs the latter of course having to sign the portable indicator. Properly-licensed operators must be there, of course. That is one of the reasons it is permissible to photostat a station license, but not an operator license.

Outside of that, how the devil are you, anyway? 73.

Sincerely yours,

John Huntton, W1LVQ
Assistant Secretary
